DESCRIPTION (field, expectations, comments):

Requirements:

A candidate must possess a PhD in Computer Science (specialization in the domain of Artificial Intelligence is preferred) and abilities for scientific and didactic works justified by participation in different international conferences and congresses and research interests and publications in the area of logic, theoretic computer science and their application to artificial Intelligence. Other requirements include: didactic experiences – also as a lecturer in English – and a language competence in English at the B2 level – due to the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages. In addition, experiences in a scientific international cooperation (for example: by PhD-thesis prepared in a co-supervision or longer research experiences abroad), a background in logic in the research areas different from computer science and student-supervision-experiences are especially welcome.
